Hanging Baskets

Now that the warmer weather is here we can look forward to planting hanging baskets. There are certain things that you can do to ensure success. Firstly, when you plant up, always use a good quality compost, and add some slow release fertiliser and water retaining crystals - they'll make the baskets so much easier to care for come midsummer! You should also make sure you always plant up around the sides of the baskets, this will give more impact, quicker! Finally, through the season, keep taking off the dead flowers and you'll get more and more grow on

Best Plants For Hanging Baskets

- Bacopa
- Callibrachoa
- Lobelia richardii
- Dichondra 'Silver Falls'
- Verbena
- Petunia – trailing
- Begonia – trailing: If you are planting a basket for a shaded spot begonias are ideal.
- Fuchsia – trailing: Trailing fuchsias are also good in semi-shade as well as in full sun.

Catherine Little

As a past contributor to 'The Camelfordian', (Magpies Nest). I have always been interested in it continuing to provide information about future events but also reports from the many clubs and organisations on past occasions. I know how popular the 'The Camelfordian' is, as despite being left a large number to distribute in my shop, I always seem to run out by the middle of the month.

'The Camelfordian' is now being picked up, not only by the people of Camelford but also by those who live further afield in Delabole, Boscastle and Tintagel amongst others. I also find regular visitors to the Town, and those with second homes or Holiday Cottages, also like to grab a copy, so Camelford is making it's mark in "Foreign Parts" as well. I have agreed to help with the advertising in the magazine because it is an important source of revenue that pays for the printing costs. It also helps local businesses to let readers know what they do, and how to contact them. I know that if I need to contact anyone I tend to reach for 'The Camelfordian' rather than trawl through 'The Yellow Pages', (Or worse, use a computer and get distracted by videos of kittens!)

So if you want to place an advertisement get in touch via thecamelfordian@gmail.com , or the Editor Diane Taylor 01840 213433 Email taylor.diane@gmail.com. I hope our existing advertisers and contributors will continue to support us and that new ones will join with them. This will ensure that 'The Camelfordian' will continue to keep you all informed and entertained

The Joy of a Good Book

by
A. N. Other.

There's something about a second, or third, hand book. It has a presence that no tablet can ever have, It's pages are there , waiting, it's cover reminds you of the delights within as your eye drifts along the book shelves.

Some people love the feel of the pages, the old fashioned printing, some say the smell of old books brings back memories of times , places and loved ones past.

The reassuring bulk of a good novel on the bedside cabinet is a reminder you can leave your everyday existence and travel to places as yet undiscovered, meeting people, inhabiting their lives for a while, walking beside them as they face problems or disasters, reading on to see how they deal with them as we forget our own.

Scientists have been warning for some time now that the light from the many screens we now use in daily life is a factor in insomnia so what better way to end the day than with a book, new or second hand, pages turning, cover creaking, an old post-card or ribbon marking a favourite page, a dried pressed flower concealed, or forgotten within. a name or two in the front -- a book, a REAL book, given, and read with love. related item;- The Insomniacs' Good book Guide.

CAMELFORD AGE CONCERN MINI BUS

You may be aware that four years ago we were able to purchase a new minibus which is being used in and around the local communities of Camelford; Delabole, St Teath, Tintagel, Boscastle, Crackington Haven, Marshgate, Tresparrett, and Hallworthy. During these four years, the bus has travelled many thousands of miles and now we need to start to consider whether or not to replace it.

Over the past few months the amount of use being made of the mini bus has undoubtedly declined. This no doubt has been partly due to the time of the year but also to the increasing age of our passengers and those willing to act as trip organisers. Before making the capital outlay of a new bus we need to try and gauge whether it will be used sufficiently by the local community to make it worthwhile.

We urgently need volunteers who are willing to act as organisers. This is not a particularly onerous task as it simply entails making a list of people [minimum of ten] wanting to go on a trip, checking if the date is free with the administrator, letting the driver know who these people are where they live, and then on the day collecting donations towards the cost of the bus. The trips can be to places of interest in Cornwall and just over the border into Devon.

May be you know of organisations or groups who can make use of the Bus and its volunteer drivers; or even consider being a organiser yourself.

If we are to replace the bus we would want to put an order in by the start of July so we need to be in a position to make that decision by the end of June. [Money for this purchase is not going to be a problem!]

If you would like more information about the bus, being an organiser, and being a passenger on any trip that is scheduled, please ring the administrator: Cherry Whitehead on 01840 213391 or email cwhitehead59@gmail.com

FERNACRE STONE CIRCLE AND OTHER LOCAL ODDITIES

Fernacre stone circle isn't very well known, although it should be. This little piece might help to explain why it is a bit of a special place...

The distinctive peak of Rough Tor is Camelford's nearest and most obvious natural attraction. It is not pronounced as written but 'row tor', not as in rowing a boat, but as having a bit of a domestic... It also gets shortened to 'rowter'. Rough Tor is the most spectacular outcrop of granite on Bodmin Moor. There are three outcrops on Rough Tor itself: The main Tor, Little Rough Tor and Showery Tor to the north. Bodmin Moor is one of a number of large batholiths found in the West Country (including Exmoor, Dartmoor, northwest of St Austell, Cammenellis, another to the west of Falmouth, Land's End and the Isles of Scilly). Batholiths are ancient (300 million years or so) subterranean upwellings of molten igneous magma. These cooled slowly enabling the formation of large crystals within the rock, mostly quartz, feldspar and micas. The cooling process, as with most solids (though not water and ice) caused shrinkage, leading to vertical cracks, many of which became filled with molten mineral inclusions – for example, metals and quartzite. As the softer overlying sedimentary rocks erode over time, the removal of the mass burden on top of the batholiths produces horizontal cracks to add to the vertical ones. Once the overburden is gone, the granite is exposed to the elements and becomes weathered and pitted (not eroded – which involves physically moving the rock) by a process of freeze-thaw. This eventually opens up the cracks to produce massive blocks, slabs and 'loose' detritus prominent on hilltop tors, especially on Rough Tor. There is another Rough Tor on Dartmoor, but this is probably just a coincidence – there's no particular connection.

Rough Tor is absolutely festooned with archaeology, like nowhere else I have seen in Britain. This piece is about some of these ancient features, particularly a stone circle called Fernacre. Fernacre is less well known than most West Country stone circles, partly because of where it is – just over half a mile south of the main summit of the Tor at 1313 feet (or about 400m if you must). But it is also because during the busiest season, it tends to be almost submerged in bracken. A lot of walkers find just getting to the top of Rough Tor is enough of a challenge. In fact coming down again can actually be as hazardous as going up and is probably more likely to lead to a twisted ankle. Having got to the top and taken in the views, if hikers plan to go further, they might well decide to yield to human nature and keep to the high places. If so, they head first for Showery Tor, a solitary stack of slabs about 500 yards to the north of the main summit, and then carry on to Brown Willy (an Anglicisation of the Cornish "Bronn Wennil", meaning 'the hill of swallows'), the highest point in Cornwall at just over 2000 feet.

At dusk, especially when the days are short, huge flocks of starlings fly very low over the approach road to the Rough Tor car park. This is best seen by walking a short way back up the access road to a cutting, where tens of thousands of them skim just overhead in close formation, making an extraordinarily whirring noise. They perform spectacular murmurations en masse, before plunging into the Forestry Commission plantation for the night. Some twitchers travel a long way to see this.

To get out of the car park at the end of the long straight road, walkers first cross the "clapper" bridge at the foot of Rough Tor, unless they fancy getting their feet wet by going round to the side to have a proper look. Paying the bridge some attention is worth it, because it is very old and unusual: Massive granite slabs on top of large stone piers. Its name is probably derived from the Anglo-Saxon word "cleaca" (I don't know what "cleaca" means – sorry about that). Beyond the bridge the main path upwards is fairly clear and people tend to keep to it with the summit in mind. This is a bit of a mistake: Following a war memorial, there is another commemorating a notorious murder: This was of Charlotte Dymond, aged 18, in 1844. Her decaying body was found at the foot of Rough Tor after a protracted search. Her boyfriend was tried and eventually hung at Bodmin Gaol despite protesting his innocence. The murder remains a mystery, as the evidence was purely circumstantial, from passers by. A confession was 'extracted' from the young man, but most today think it was faked.

Walkers also climb past an early bronze-age settlement of over 100 hut circles, the remains of field systems and half a dozen larger irregular enclosures, probably used for livestock. There are hut circles all over Rough Tor and Brown Willy, as well as man-made cairns. These have been carbon dated to between 2162 – 1746 BC. I'm not sure exactly what was tested to arrive at these numbers and the statistician in me balks at the precision of the date range. But that aside, the carbon dates place all the remains firmly in the early Bronze Age, as opposed to the earlier Neolithic Stone Age or later Iron Age. That said, the summit of Rough Tor is enclosed by a much earlier "series of rough Neolithic stone walls linking natural outcrops to form an enclosure" (quote unknown). To the north, the single granite stack of Showery Tor is also encircled by the remains of a massive and complete ring cairn, the only natural formation known to be enclosed in this way. There are also the foundations of a medieval chapel built onto the side of the main summit. It is the only known hilltop chapel on Bodmin Moor, and was recorded in the 14th century. It was dedicated to St Michael. There are also the remains of a medieval dwelling (rectilinear, so not Bronze Age) at the foot of the Tor. This suggests some sort of hermitage. However, taken together all these signs of human occupation make it clear that the whole area was viewed as 'special' or sacred for millennia. Ten thousand years ago the area was forested, and occupied by Neolithic man, probably in natural clearings. Deforestation was caused by humans during the Bronze Age, to make way for arable farming and grazing, for firewood and possibly copper and bronze smelting (though this is conjecture – no oven remains seem to have been reported). The deforestation was self-perpetuating and led to poor acidic soil due to the inherent acidity of the underlying granite.

Walkers can easily miss a Holy well, to the north of the main path. It was only discovered in 1970, but fairly promptly went missing again - the site was lost. The well was rediscovered and restored in 1994. A small spring rises there. To find the well it is best to follow the line of reeds up the stream.

Having reached the summit of Rough Tor and resisted the temptation to go on to Brown Willy or just turn around and go back down, the hiker can go 'off-piste' and scramble down southwards to find Fernacre Stone Circle (bracken permitting). Fernacre is one of the largest stone circles in Cornwall, measuring about 135 by 142 feet. 61 standing stones survive; but there may originally have been as many as 77 to 95. Most are about 3 to 4 feet high. Fernacre may be another Anglicisation of "bracken land". But I prefer the more romantic "fairy land", "Feren" being the old plural form of 'fairy'.

There are two other stone circles near Fernacre: Stannon, the western most, and Louden, slightly to the south. Fernacre is the eastern most of the circles. Together the three stone circles form a scalene triangle - one with no equal sides. Interestingly (well to me anyway) all three circles have a single distinctly triangular 'tri-stone'. Each is placed at the furthest point from the other circles, the 'apex' of the triangle. The Fernacre tri-stone is not aligned or orientated, although Stannon's faces east and Louden's to the north, so that the tri-stones are looking into the triangle.

At this point pseudo-science raises its ugly head: When viewed from a certain alignment the scalene triangle 'mirrors' the profile of Rough Tor itself when seen from that angle. While this is true, it is only the case if the observer is at the right distance from the triangle of stone circles and also standing on the alignment where the Louden tri-stone lines up with the summit of Rough Tor. It's a pity that the Stone Circle builders didn't bother to put in a marker stone to show you where to stand. It has been pointed out that the Louden tri-stone has a notch in it, which points at the Rough Tor summit. This implies the tri-stone was specially selected, not only for its triangular shape, but because of its notch. I don't think people in the early Bronze Age could carve such a feature themselves, so it was probably a 'found object'. I think this poses a serious problem: As a spatial statistician (that's a geographer who does maths) I think this takes the whole thing close to the realm of ley lines and other dubious forms of pattern recognition. To put the ley line debate in a nutshell (and forgive me for doing this while missing out all the chewy stuff about dowsing and mysterious phenomena), it is possible to find an alignment of three or more points in any random distribution of 'significant' points on a map, if the set of points is large enough. This is particularly so if the constraints of proximity and absolute precision are relaxed. I think the triangles of circles and tri-stones fall into the same sort of controversy.

Finally, moving away from pseudo-science, the popular TV series Time Team did a program on Rough Tor where they discovered a 'cursus' or avenue, a roughly parallel spaced pair of stone lines climbing up towards the summit. It was the last episode of series 13 (out of 20 in all), and aired in 2007. Unfortunately, the Time Team website no longer has this episode to be watched again on-line. So I have only my memory and the remains of what I am pleased to call my mind to go on: I did watch it when it was first broadcast. The cursus, like so many pre-historic remains, defies modern thinking and geometry. It is certainly very large; around 1,000 feet long, and has a slight kink to the west in it. It is not obvious on the surface, which is probably why Time Team picked it. Despite the short three day dig duration, the research work and at least some excavation went on for months. For such a large discovery, the inter-web is surprisingly quiet on the subject. So there is not much more I can say.

...Except that Fernacre stone circle is once of my favourite local spots, and is particularly special because you can easily be there on your own. You don't have to climb all the way up Rough Tor to get there and it is easy to find if you go in the winter or spring when it isn't buried in bracken.

Sheep worrying

I am very sorry to have to report that Maggie Iles of College Road has had another dog running loose on her land chasing her sheep. You will remember that last year two of her sheep were badly savaged and almost died leaving Maggie with a hefty vet's bill and a great deal of distress.

There are clear signs along the riverside walk advising dog owners that there is livestock in the neighbouring fields.

I am a dog owner and know the importance of letting your dog have a good run off the lead but it is our responsibility to ensure that our dogs are under our control all of the time.

Blue-green algae – Dangers to dogs

Blue-green algae is a term used to describe a group of bacteria, called cyanobacteria.

They are not actually algae, but the organisms got this name because they often give the appearance of algae when they clump together in bodies of water. Blue-green algae may not always be harmful but you can't tell simply by looking, so it's best not to let your dog near the water

The bacteria cannot be seen with the naked eye unless they clump together. When this happens, blue-green algae can look like green flakes, greenish bundles or brown dots in a pond, lake or stream.

When the algae blooms, it can give look like a blue-green scum has appeared on the surface of the water. It sometimes looks a bit like pea soup.

Blooms of the organisms often build up around the edges of ponds and lakes, which may look like foam.

It is most common in non-flowing fresh water such as lakes and ponds during hot weather when there is less rainfall, but can also occur at other times of the year.

You may notice dead fish in ponds or lakes with a high concentration of the toxic bacteria. Don't let your dog drink from water containing dead animals.

The algae may be present in a harmful form even if you cannot see it, so take note of any warning signs in the area.

From Revd Angela Cooper Priest-in-Charge of the Camel-Allen Churches: Lanteglos, Camelford, Advent, St Teath,

'Compassion fatigue' is something that can affect us all when we are faced with relentlessly-horrific news reports day after day, that on the one hand threaten to overwhelm us, so we turn away, and on the other, seem so far removed from our own experience that we are tempted to switch-off. The news itself is even prefaced by warnings, in case, safe in our comfy armchairs we should be unduly disturbed; 'You may find some images in this report distressing.' Well too bad - so we should! We should be horrified, upset and distressed: we must not close our eyes and our hearts. May we not lose sight of the fact that those affected by the fighting in Syria and in other places of conflict around our world are people just like us.

Angela

God of love, be with those who live in constant fear, not knowing when or where
the next bomb may fall,
or if this day is to be their last;
who struggle to find food
and water amidst the rubble
of a place called home
and live among the dead.
May these precious people know their cries are heard,
that this world does care,
and be released from the pain and suffering that is,
until now, their daily bread.

A Methodist Ministers View

As I sit down to write this article the messages of the Easter Story are fresh in my mind, but I am also forward planning for the month of May. One of the key weeks of the year for Churches in Great Britain is Christian Aid Week, which this year runs from the 13th – 19th May. Meanwhile I have in mind the current world news which includes the diplomatic actions between our Country and Russia following the events in Salisbury in early March, the introduction of trading tariffs by America and China, in addition to the ongoing World situations of political tension, refugees, poverty and hunger. Many people are suffering in various ways in our World, and this suffering continues for long periods of time, but the stories are no longer headline news.

Christian Aid and other relief organisations are working day in and day out, year in and year out to bring about changes in the lives and experiences of people who are confronted with life situations which we would find intolerable. Take time to imagine life without water on tap, and a small plot of land from which to make an inadequate living. It may well be that the landowner's only tool is a mattock, which is used for digging, sowing, weeding and harvesting. We may at times be dissatisfied with our life situation, but we have much to be thankful for.

All the above arises in my mind from one of the truths which emanates from the Easter Day Story of Jesus' encounter with Mary Magdalene. In his conversation with Mary Jesus infers that because we acknowledge God as our 'Father in heaven' we are all part of one human family. Jesus says to Mary – see John Chapter 20 verses 17 – “God to my brothers and tell them that I am returning to him who is my Father and their Father, my God and their God.” It follows that across the world under God we are all brothers and sisters within the human family and should have a family concern for our suffering members and the dire life situation that they experience.

The song sung some years ago by 'The Spinners' came to mind which includes these words: -

*'Wherever you go you will find my kin,
Whatever the creed and colour of their skin,
They're the family of man.'*

Our world situation is concerning and involves us all in contributing in prayer, words, action and giving to bring about change.

Every Blessing,

Bryan Ede

Camelford W.I.

There has been a WI in Camelford for 80 years. We are fortunate to have in our archives the very first record and minute books starting in 1938 and they make interesting reading. A hand written list inside the Record Book contains 74 names.

Quoting from the Record Book.....

"A Public Meeting was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday February 16th 1938 to consider the formation of a Women's Institute in Camelford. Miss Henmark (a County Voluntary Organiser) explained very capably the formation and the rules of the WI and it was unanimously decided to form a branch. President - Mrs Fisher, Secretary - Mrs Neil and Treasurer - Mrs Leese, were proposed and seconded. Ten more ladies completed the Committee. It was proposed that the first meeting would be on March 21st 1938 at 7pm"

So the new Committee met for the first time on March 3rd 1938 to decide the meeting venue. The Chapel Street Schoolroom in Camelford was chosen for the first meeting. The meeting would consist of a business part followed by a Social half hour with competitions and music.

So on March 21st 1938 the very first meeting was held in the Chapel Street Schoolroom. The Annual Fee was discussed with members joining half way through the year only paying half the fee. The month of the AGM was set as March and of course the Tea Rota was drawn up. This was to be in alphabetical order by surname ( all of the ladies were know and addressed as Mrs or Miss) and the price of a cup of tea was to be one penny.

The very first speaker Camelford had was a Miss Sedgwick from Truro who gave her talk on FOOD FOR HEALTH - nothing is new is it !
